WHAT ARE THESE SPECKS IN THE OIL?

A common question we receive from people is, "What are these specks in my CBD oil?". First of all, it is important to know that the specks you see are not solid particulates. They are actually oil. We use a proprietary ethanol extraction method that strips ALL the compounds out of the hemp plant. This means that both extreme polar and non-polar compounds are extracted. Other extraction methods that are used do not do this, particularly CO2 based extractions. The oil spots that you see are actually extreme, heavy, polar compounds. Typically when you get above a mg strength of 600mg, the MCT oil is not capable of keeping these heavy, extreme, polar compounds dissolved. As a result these compounds fall out of solution and stay suspended in the MCT oil. A lot of companies consider this to be "dirty" oil. To fix that problem they will "clean" the oil through distillation, thus creating what is called a distillate oil. Distillation removes these heavy polar compounds and makes the oil look "clean". When you look at a distillate oil it will appear to be a light brown, honey looking oil. This is considered "clean", but it is now lacking heavy polar compounds. It is our philosophy to give our customers everything that is available in the plant. We do not remove these heavy polar compounds. You can rest assured that when you take a Silver Moon Nutraceuticals product you are getting the very best and every available compound in the hemp plant is being delivered to you through our tinctures. This is important, especially as it concerns the entourage effect. So remember, if you are taking an oil that is over 600mg and do not see specks of oil in your dropper, it probably means that the extreme, heavy polar compounds are not present.
